Further details

A spell of very strong winds will affect much of Scotland from Monday afternoon into Tuesday morning. The strongest winds will likely be across exposed parts of the northwest on Monday afternoon and evening where gusts of 55-65 mph are widely expected, with the potential for 70-80 mph gusts in more exposed parts such as the Hebrides.

Later Monday and into early Tuesday the swathe of stronger winds will transfer southeastwards, with winds easing across the northwest during this time. Gusts in the 55-65 mph range remain possible up to the point when the stronger swathe finally clears the southeast of Scotland on Tuesday morning.

Reason for update

To adjust the validity time, and extend the area of the warning to encompass eastern Scotland.

✓ Very low likelihood of medium impacts
